

Best sites for attractive, affordable art to liven up your walls (and video calls!)

Six great platforms to buy illustration and graphic design prints and spice up your walls for virtual meetings.

You are a talking head on the video call. You speak in the monthly meeting, a little awkward as people watch you when all you can see is yourself gabbing away on the screen.

You're out of your pajamas, you've shaved, you've washed; the kids are safely stowed away and your partner isn't hanging around in the background. And yet, something is wrong, hideously wrong. Nobody will tell you this, but you've committed the most heinous sin: You've left the wall behind your head completely blank like a right tool. Or, even worse, you've left up some naff photos of yourself that look nothing like you.

The solution? Well, you could download a virtual background for your Zoom or Hangouts app, but that joke will wear thin quick. Besides, nothing can be as fancy as a great piece of art on your wall. Also, why not support a starving artist during lockdown instead of downloading a background image for free?

If you agree and are looking for the finest places to buy illustration and graphic design prints and posters to spice up your wall for a video call, then you've landed on the right page friend. Now follows our top six choices to buy wall art online, including ones that frame your purchase and which are all still shipping during this time of distinct crisis.

We've also chosen our favourite artworks on sale currently from the stores.

K&M began life in 1982 as artist/silkscreen printers working with a small second-hand screen press in a basement flat in central Brighton.

Today (still in East Sussex) they operate from 30,000 square feet of workshops and offices with brilliant printers, framers, designers, customer service, accounts and admin teams. King & McGaw still make everything by hand and focus on creating beautiful products for many of the world's greatest museums, galleries and artists and through this retail web site.
