Drop’s DCX keycap sets for mechanical keyboards are buy one, get one free

Drop’s DCX keys fit Cherry-style keyboard switches, and while they’re quite high quality, they make for a better value than the popular GMK sets out there (which often have long delivery delays). They’re an even better deal with this BOGO promo.

You can easily step up your PC gaming setup with Govee’s DreamView G1 light strip, which is currently on sale at Amazon for $69.99 when you click the coupon for $30 off. The flexible, colorful LED strip is sized for 24- to 32-inch monitors (including ultrawides) and comes with a connected fisheye camera that points down at your screen, allowing the light strip to match the colors on your display.

This is the simplified setup of the DreamView G1 Pro that I reviewed last year, which also came with some flanking light towers. As cool as the towers are, however, they require a lot more space compared to a light strip that easily attaches to the rear of your monitor. Thankfully, even with just the strip, the lighting is bright and plenty immersive.

If you and the fam need some password management in your lives (because we all do), 1Password is offering new subscribers half off an annual family plan until June 17th, dropping it to $29.94 (about $30 off) for the first year. With this plan, you get access for up to five people on unlimited devices. And one of the most convenient things about a plan like this is that you can share your entire password vault with one another if you choose to do so. Plus, you can save and generate secure passwords across a range of operating systems, including Windows, macOS, iOS, Android, ChromeOS, and even Linux.

The deal is available to both new and returning subscribers, provided you canceled your subscription at least a month ago. Just be mindful that the deal is only available until May 27th at 11:59PM PT (or May 28th at 2:59AM ET). Oh, and be sure to set a reminder for after the promotion period ends, as the price will jump back to its regular rate of $7.99 a month after the three-month window has lapsed.

https://www.theverge.com/2023/5/20/23730214/drop-keyboard-keycaps-govee-dreamview-gaming-lights-1password-family-deal-sale