

Epic v. Google: everything we learned in Fortnite court

Epic: “I agree with Google, we need to look at the real world.”

Epic is getting eight minutes of rebuttal to Google’s closing argument, and lead attorney Gary Bornstein is using part of it to argue this: we should look at the internal documents in this case to see what’s actually going on.

“What did they say in their documents? That tells you what they believed in the real world.”

He begins by showing one of the emails Google showed us about reacting to an Apple change in price – and that Google chose not to follow that price change at the time.

“They chose not to change their price despite believing that Apple was changing theirs,” he says, and “during that time not a single developer pulled out of the Play Store to focus on iOS.”

<https://www.theverge.com/23945184/epic-v-google-fortnite-play-store-antitrust-trial-updates>