

Framework is teasing a ‘big’ update for August 26th – could it be Framework 16?

While that may seem like a vague phrase, it might narrow things down quite a bit! Framework only has one existing “big” product other than the Framework Desktop, the one that mysteriously didn’t get an update at its last event in February.

Or, maybe Framework will help fisherman change how they catch fish in New England? That’s what Google Search tells me, anyhow:

I think the Framework Laptop 16 is a safer bet, though.

I’ve been quietly frustrated that I haven’t been able to give the Laptop 16 my full recommendation yet – because I want products like this to exist! – partly because of early cooling and build quality deficiencies, and partly because Framework has never truly promised that you’ll be able to actually upgrade its GPU to a more powerful one down the road.

But with Framework’s Laptop 13, the company has proved again and again that truly modular and upgradable laptops can be a reality, and it’s ironed out many issues along the way. Here’s hoping August 26th is the day it fulfills the promise of modular gaming / creator laptops as well.

<https://www.theverge.com/news/763037/framework-is-teasing-a-big-update-for-august-26th-could-it-be-framework-16>