Google posts an official look at the Pixel 10 Pro Fold

Google’s next Pixel launch event doesn’t happen until next week, but the company has already announced the Pixel 10 Pro Fold with a brief video teaser published on Tuesday. Based on the video, the new Fold will closely resemble the Pixel 9 Pro Fold — though that’s not a huge surprise, based on what’s already leaked about the device.

The 30-second teaser includes a few shadowy glimpses of the new device, a peek at the unfolded inner display, and a solid look at the back of the foldable and its camera system. The teaser also shows that the phone will come in the nice gray color that Google has already shown in a similar video for a Pixel 10.

Google’s Pixel 10 Pro Fold video doesn’t include any specs, unfortunately, though the phone is rumored to have an IP68 rating that would make it dustproof. Leaks have also shown the phone in green and gold colors that aren’t in this video. And while the video’s description includes the August 20th Pixel 10 event date, the video doesn’t say when the phone might actually be released — and a report from WinFuture indicates that may not happen until October.

Fortunately, with Google’s event just over a week away, we don’t have to wait too much longer to get all the details.

https://www.theverge.com/news/758429/google-pixel-10-pro-fold-video-teaser-leaks