How to move your notes out of Evernote

When it launched in 2008, Evernote became the go-to application for many for taking notes, tracking documents, organizing projects, and generally being the place to put anything you might want to find later. However, in the last few years, Evernote's reputation has suffered due to an aging interface, privacy missteps, increased fees, and performance issues.

And now, it's being acquired by app developer Bending Spoons.

When an app is depended on by a large number of people – especially one that's been around long enough so that a number of its users may have a lot of data stored in it – the first thought that many will have is: what will happen to my data?

While it's usually not a good idea to panic, it never hurts to back up your data in case you decide it's time to bail. If you're moving to another app, it could be easier than you'd think – several apps, such as Notion and Zoho Notebook, have created ways to import Evernote files directly. But even if you don't plan to switch, it's a good idea to know how to export your data, if only to have an independent backup of your content, just in case.

a:hover]:shadow-highlight-franklin [&>a]:shadow-underline-black dark:[&>a:hover]:shadow-highlight-franklin dark:[&>a]:shadow-underline-white md:text-30″>How to export your

Evernote data