HQ Trivia is now available in beta from the Play Store

Earlier this month, HQ Trivia announced that the app would finally be available for Android users, allowing them to pre-register to download it. The app is now available in the Google Play Store's Early Access section.

The game launched this past fall on iOS. The Android app is still in beta, and the product page notes that the app is potentially unstable. Recode reported earlier this month that the company is working to raise money from venture capitalists for a potential $100 million valuation. The addition of an Android app will likely help boost its user base.

Created by Vine co-founders Rus Yusupov and fellow co-founder Colin Kroll, the game is a live trivia contest that has become extremely popular in recent months. Players compete each day at 3PM and 9PM ET to answer 12 multiple choice questions to win cash prizes – which have ballooned in recent weeks to thousands of dollars, which has prompted some efforts to cheat.

https://www.theverge.com/2017/12/31/16836446/hq-trivia-beta-android-google-play-store