

MWC 2025: all the phones, gadgets, and commentary from Barcelona

The Verge is heading to Barcelona, Spain, for Mobile World Congress 2025. We're fresh off CES, where we saw plenty of new gadgets, from TVs to gaming handhelds and smart glasses. But, as it says right in the name, MWC 2025 is more focused on... mobile stuff. And it's for a global audience, which means not everything will make its way to the US.

Expect announcements from companies like Xiaomi and Nothing, the latter of which will unveil the Nothing Phone 3A, and other global phone makers. Larger firms like Samsung and Google will be there, though it's still unclear if they'll have news. But we're still waiting for more details on Samsung's Galaxy S25 Edge, so maybe that'll pop up at the show.

Keep this page bookmarked for all the news, commentary, and first looks from the show floor.

<https://www.theverge.com/news/616633/mwc-2025-news-products-announcements>