The Google Pixel 3A is already a great value for $399, but it's currently $50 less than usual at a bunch of retailers. Google's Pixel lineup isn't the easiest to suss out if you're unfamiliar, and it's about to get a little more complicated next week when the Pixel 4 is announced.

The Pixel 3A is the more budget-friendly version of the flagship Pixel 3. Same goes for the Pixel 3A XL, but it has a bigger battery and screen. It, too, is $50 off of its normal price. For the things it lacks from the more expensive variant, like the high-end build materials, the Snapdragon 845, and the wide-angle selfie cam, it retains most of its key selling points: the camera performance, an OLED screen, Android 10 support, and compatibility with all US carriers.

eBay is hosting a sale today on games, gaming accessories, and other tech. There’s, frankly, too much to list here, but below you’ll find a few of the highlights. You can check out all of the offerings over at i.

- for Nintendo Switch is $47.99 ($12 off of its usual price)
- is $39.99 ($20 off)
- (1-year membership, physical card, can be converted into Xbox Game Pass Ultimate) is $49.99 ($10 off)
- (9th Gen Intel Core i5, 12GB RAM, Nvidia GTX 1650, 1TB HDD, 128GB SSD) is $799 (usually $1,095.99)
- for use with PS4, PC, iOS 13, and Android 10 is $38.99 ($21 off)

A callback to yesterday’s best deals

Amazon’s deal on the excellent Beats Powerbeats Pro truly wireless headphones just keeps on going. It started earlier this week, and to my surprise, it’s still available. We’ve seen $50 off sales like these before, but this one sticks out because you can save on every color that’s available (black, ivory, moss, navy).

If you’re looking for a set of truly wireless earbuds that you can rely on for good sound, comfort, and long-lasting battery life, this model is your next.
