

'Self-Worth Can't Be Bought': Marie Osmond Says She Will Not Leave Money Behind for Her 8 Children

Entertainment maven Marie Osmond has amassed a multi-million dollar fortune throughout her career – but don't expect her to give any to her children.

In an interview with Fox News Digital, the "Donny & Marie" actress spoke about her decision to not provide her children with a financial safety net.

"I just think you rob them of finding who they are, and self-worth can't be bought. That's my opinion," she said, though she clarified that she does help her children financially "along the way" here and there. "I believe that, when I leave this life, I want my children to know that they can take care of themselves."

Related: 15 Ways to Better Manage Your Work-Life Balance as a Parent

Osmond has eight children – Stephen (40), Jessica (36), Rachael (34), Brandon (27), Brianna (25), Matthew (24), Abigail (21) and one son Michael who died in 2010 at the age of 18.

She is also a grandmother to eight children.

Osmond echoed her sentiments to the New York Post last week when discussing motherhood.

“When you tell a child – I know, I’ve seen it throughout my life – that you’re leaving them all this money it un-inspires them,” the star told the outlet. “They don’t learn the joy of hard work, of picking themselves up when things don’t work. I believe in general that you rob children of the experience of figuring out who they are.”

Osmond is reportedly worth an estimated $20 million, much of which she accumulated through her career as a country artist and sitcom star.

Related: Working Parents: Stop Burnout in Its Tracks With These Tips

Osmond currently plays Countess Von Frankfurt in CBS’ soap opera series “The Bold and the Beautiful.”

<https://www.entrepreneur.com/business-news/marie-osmond-wont-be-leaving-her-children-an-inheritance/464550>