The Old Guard sequel is coming to Netflix this July

It only took five years, but Netflix has finally locked in its plan to premiere The Old Guard's long awaited sequel.

Today, Netflix announced that director Victoria Mahoney's (You, Lovecraft Country) The Old Guard 2 is slated to debut on July 2nd. Rather than dropping a trailer, Netflix released a handful of new stills from the film, and teased some of its plot details. Set some time after the first movie, The Old Guard 2 continues the story of previously-immortal warrior Andy (Charlize Theron) and her team of expert soldiers who have all been blessed / cursed with never ending lives.

With Quynh (Veronica Ngô), another immortal, now free from her underwater prison and on the hunt for revenge, Andy and her teammates Nile (KiKi Layne), Joe (Marwan Kenzari), Nicky (Luca Marinelli) have no choice but to fight one of their own. Because they can both die, the situation's particularly dangerous for Andy and ex CIA operative James Copley (Chiwetel Ejiofor). But with Tuah (Henry Golding) potentially being on the verge of discovering how the groups' healing powers work, Andy might not be spending all that much time as a regular woman.

In an interview with Netflix's Tudum blog, Theron teased that, in addition to bringing Uma Thurman into the fold, the sequel will feature a little something for anyone who was a fan of the first film or the original graphic novel by Greg Rucka and Leandro Fernández.

"Andy and her warriors are back with a renewed sense of purpose," Theron said. "The stakes are even higher now that Andy is mortal and can die – but that certainly won’t keep her out of the action.”

https://www.theverge.com/netflix/654516/the-old-guard-2-premiere-date