The PS5 is getting DVR support in Japan this year

Sony has announced that the PlayStation 5 will get DVR functionality in Japan by way of a new app that'll work with its Nasne tuners. The app will be called Torne (pronounced to-ru-ne) and should be available later this year.

Torne was originally a TV tuner add-on for the PS3 that was released in 2010 and allowed you to save broadcast shows to your console's hard drive and transfer them to a PSP or PS Vita. It was followed by Nasne, which added its own storage and worked more like a NAS drive, with the recordings available through a mobile app.

Sony stopped selling Nasne in 2019, but last year Japanese peripheral manufacturer Buffalo announced that it'd take over the product and release Buffalo-branded versions, with the first models set to ship this spring. The new Nasne still looks like a PS3, just with a Buffalo logo on it; Buffalo is doubling the internal storage to 2TB, however, and tripling external storage capability to 6TB. It'll go on sale later this month for 29,800 yen (~$270).

https://www.theverge.com/2021/3/16/22335149/ps5-nasne-dvr-app-japan-release-buffalo