Whether you’re celebrating the end of Q4 or finally winding down in time to close out the year, there’s one thing none of us can avoid: tis the season of holiday parties. Company parties, holiday mixers, or whatever celebratory variation it might be, you shouldn’t have stare blankly into your closet trying to figure out what to wear.

When it comes to sanctioned company parties, there are usually two different roads you can take, but they both end up in the same place. If you’re attending a company holiday party during work hours or off hours, the rule of thumb still stands — dress to impress. Unless there are specific guidelines on party attire, you won’t get set off any flags by leveling up from your usual work-appropriate attire. And, even if your holiday party is outside work hours, remember that you wear will be ingrained in the minds of everyone you interact with the following work week.

Most importantly, dress comfortably, and keep in mind that the afternoon/night will be an event that will most likely filled with mingling and dancing.

Here are a few of our favorite looks for men. For women, check out some recent tips for renting (instead of buying) a wardrobe this holiday season.
