

Venezuelans Hope to End their Misery by Casting Ballots on Sunday

Venezuelans are heading to the polls on Sunday in the most anticipated elections in decades, with many hoping to put an end to the repressive political system established 25 years ago by Hugo Chávez and inherited a decade ago by Nicolás Maduro. The left-wing populist has pushed the country into economic decline, leading a quarter of the 28.3 million population to flee.

Source